New scholarships for students from African countries to study Politics and International Relations at the University of Cambridge

Would you like to pursue graduate study at the University of Cambridge, one of the world's finest universities?

New scholarships are now available for students from African countries undertaking either a one-year MPhil in International Relations and Politics, or a three-year PhD in a field related to governance and human rights from 2015.

Jointly funded by the David & Elaine Potter Foundation and the Cambridge Trust, the scholarships will pay the full cost of study and living in Cambridge for the length of your course.

The Scholarships will fund:

An MPhil in International Relations and Politics

This flagship one-year graduate degree in the Department of Politics and International Studies (POLIS) includes a range of optional courses and a dissertation component. It is well suited to those who wish to pursue doctoral research and an academic career in this field.

A PhD in Politics and International Studies, the Centre of Governance and Human Rights (CGHR)

CGHR is an outward focused, multi-disciplinary research centre within POLIS, committed to advancing thought and practice within areas of critical importance to global justice and human wellbeing. Current CGHR research focuses on: politics, digital technology and the media; violence, conflict and external peace interventions; the right to life.

"Being identified as having the capacity and potential to be one of the next generation of transformative African thinkers and practitioners in the field of peace and security is both humbling and motivating."

Njoki Wamai, PhD student at POLIS/CGHR

Deadline for scholarship applications: 2 December 2014

If you would like to apply, first research thoroughly the courses available (below) and the entry requirements and then start your application: <http://www.graduate.study.cam.ac.uk>
